

Deloitte Legal Czech Desk

Czech/German Services Group

All our clients need for successful cross-border activities

Since the Velvet Revolution in 1989, economic and cultural relations between Germany and the Czech Republic have developed significantly. The Czech Republic acceded to the EU in 2004, after which Germany has become its most important trading partner, with a relative share of around 32% of the Czech Republic's total exports. Export products fall mainly into the areas of motor vehicles (except motorcycles), trailers and semi-trailers, machinery and equipment, electrical equipment and computers, and electronic and optical instruments and equipment. On the other hand, Germany's exports to the Czech Republic have a stable share of around 25% of the Czech Republic's total imports. Industry is the backbone of both economies and therefore both countries are not only linked by trade, but also by supply chains, including development, research, and innovation. Approximately 4,000 German companies operate in the Czech Republic. ➔

In terms of capital involvement, these are mostly wholly-owned subsidiaries of German business entities, but also mixed companies with different capital participation. On the other hand, there are about 150 companies operating in Germany with equity participation above 50.1% from the Czech Republic.

The experts from the Czech Desk bundle our comprehensive cross-border expertise in German-Czech business transactions. As a one-stop point of contact, we are the central partner for German entrepreneurs and companies planning investments in the Czech Republic, as well as for Czech entrepreneurs and companies in Germany. The lawyers at our Czech Desk speak fluent Czech as well as German and English and have many years of experience in advising German and Czech clients on cross-border legal matters. They do not only have excellent knowledge of the respective law in order to bridge the still existing differences in the legal systems. Above all, they are familiar with the cultural subtleties in order to provide clients with the best possible support in the planning, preparation and implementation of their activities.
